Western Governors University: More than a quarter century ago, Colorado Gov. Roy Romer led a consortium of U.S. governors to establish Western Governors University. In 2023, Gov. Jared Polis signed a proclamation recognizing the Western Governors University Colorado partnership and its shared mission to increase access to education for students. Western Governors University offers online degree programs in business, information technology, health care and teaching. Alumni work at some of the largest employers in Colorado, including local governments. Programs are self-paced and competency-based, meaning they measure skills and learning rather than time spent in class. The format gives adult learners the opportunity to accelerate — saving both time and money. Ninety-five percent of employers say they would hire another Western Governors University graduate.
